

Statement in Response to News Article Published 28/12/18

McKenzie Group Consulting undertook the role of principal certifying authority on the project. The current NSW system allows for suitably qualified structural engineers to design, inspect and certify the structural elements. Once this is done we can rely on that structural certification as part of our role. Our legislative role does not allow McKenzie Group to certify specific structural elements within the building as these must be undertaken by a qualified structural engineer.

We will be assisting the department and other authorities throughout the investigation.
